

Bulletin

The Family Home - As Safe as Houses

The capital gains tax (CGT) exemption for gains made on the sale of your home is one of the most valuable reliefs from which many people benefit during their lifetime. The relief is well known: CGT exemption whatever the level of the capital gain on the sale of any property that has been your main residence. In this bulletin we look at the operation of the relief and consider factors that may cause it to be restricted.

Several important basic points

Only a property occupied as a residence can qualify for the exemption. An investment property in which you have never lived would not qualify.

The term 'residence' can include outbuildings separate from the main property but this is a difficult area. Please talk to us if this is likely to be relevant to you.

'Occupying' as a residence requires a degree of permanence so that living in a property for say, just two weeks with a view to benefiting from the exemption is unlikely to work.

The exemption includes land that is for 'occupation and enjoyment with the residence as its garden or grounds up to the permitted area'. The permitted area is $\frac{1}{2}$ a hectare including the site of the property which equates to about $1\frac{1}{4}$ acres in old money! Larger gardens and grounds may qualify but only if they are appropriate to the size and character of the property and are required for the reasonable enjoyment of it. This can be a difficult test. In a recent court case the exemption was not given on land of $7\frac{1}{2}$ hectares attaching to a property. The owner said he needed that land to enjoy the property because he was keen on horses and riding. The courts decided that the owner's subjective liking for horses was irrelevant and, applying an objective test, the land was not needed for the reasonable enjoyment of the property.

Selling land separately

What if you want to sell off some of your garden for someone else to build on? Will the exemption apply? In simple terms it will if you continue to own the property with the rest of the garden and the total original area was within the $\frac{1}{2}$ a hectare limit.

Where the total area exceeds $\frac{1}{2}$ a hectare and some is sold then you would have to show that the part sold was needed for the reasonable enjoyment of the property and this can clearly be difficult if you were prepared to sell it off.

What if on the other hand you sell your house and part of the garden and then at a later date sell the rest of the garden off separately, say for development? Then you will not get the benefit of the exemption on the second sale because the land is no longer part of your main residence at the point of sale.

More than one residence

It is increasingly common for people to own more than one residence. However an individual can only benefit from the CGT exemption on one property at a time. In the case of a married couple, there can only be one main residence for both. Where an individual has two (or more) residences then an election can be made to choose which should be the one to benefit from the CGT exemption on sale. Note that the property need not be in the UK to benefit although foreign tax implications may then need to be brought into the equation.

David has a property he lives in during the week and a country cottage where he lives at weekends. A valid election may be made for the country cottage to be exempt for CGT purposes. It does not matter that it is not the main residence.

The election must normally be made within two years of acquiring a second residence and the potential consequences of failure to elect are shown in the case study overleaf.

Furthermore the case study demonstrates the beneficial rule that allows CGT exemption for the last three years of ownership of a property that has at some time been the main residence.

Case study

Wayne, a 40% taxpayer, acquired a home in 2000 in which he lived full-time. In 2004 he bought a second home and divided his time between the two properties.

- Either property may qualify for the exemption as Wayne spends time at each - ie they both count as 'residences'.
- Choosing which property should benefit is not always easy since it depends on which is the more likely to be sold and which is the more likely to show a significant gain. Some crystal ball gazing may be needed!
- The choice of property needs to be made by election to the Inland Revenue within two years of acquiring the second home. Missing this time limit means that the Inland Revenue will decide on any future sale which property was, as a question of fact, the main residence.

Wayne elects for the second home to be treated as his main residence for CGT purposes. In 2010 he sells both properties realising a gain of £100,000 on the first property and £150,000 on the second property.

The gain on the second property is CGT-free because of the election.

Part of the gain on the first property is exempt. Namely that relating to

- the four years before the second property was acquired (when the first property was the only residence) and
- the last three years of ownership which will always qualify providing the property has been the main residence at some time.

In other words out of the ten years of ownership, a total of seven qualify for the exemption. Therefore 3/10ths of the gain - ie £30,000 will be taxable. Taper relief at 40% will reduce the chargeable gain to £18,000. Assuming no other gains in the year, nearly half of this (on current figures) would be covered by the annual exemption giving a CGT liability of under £4,000. Not bad on total gains of £250,000.

Without the election, and the first property being treated as the main residence throughout, Wayne would have found the gain on the first property wholly exempt and the gain on the second property wholly chargeable. This could have resulted in a CGT liability of nearly £45,000 after taking into account taper relief at 20% and the annual exemption. Failure to make an election can be an expensive mistake.

Business use

More and more people work from home these days. Does working from home affect the CGT exemption on sale? The answer is simple - it may do!

Rather more helpfully the basic rule is that the exemption will be denied to the extent that part of your home is used exclusively for business purposes. In many cases of course the business use is not exclusive, your office doubling as a spare bedroom for guests for example, in which case there is not a problem.

Where there is exclusive business use then part of the gain on sale will be chargeable rather than exempt. However this part of the gain may well be eligible for business asset taper relief quite probably at 75% which will serve to reduce the impact of any charge. As is all too often the case with tax, the calculation is neither as simple nor as logical as you would expect but we can talk you through the principles involved if this is of interest to you. In any case it may well be that you plan to acquire a further property, also with part for business use, in which case the business use element of the gain can be deferred by 'rolling over' the gain against the cost of the new property.

Disclaimer - for information of users
This bulletin is published for the information of clients. It provides only an overview of the regulations in force at the date of publication, and no action should be taken without consulting the detailed legislation or seeking professional advice. Therefore no responsibility for loss occasioned by any person acting or refraining from action as a result of the material contained in this bulletin can be accepted by the authors or the firm.

Residential letting

A further relief is given if your main residence has been let as residential accommodation during the period of ownership. A case study best demonstrates the operation of this.

Case study

Frank bought a property in 1990 and lived in it as his main residence for eight years until 1998. Then he bought a second property which immediately became his main residence and the first property was let from then until its sale in 2004.

The gain on sale of the first property amounted to £210,000.

Exempt as main residence

1990-1998	8 years (actual occupation)
2001-2004	3 years (last 3 years of ownership) 11 years

$$\text{Gain exempt} = 11/14 \times £210,000 = £165,000$$

The balance of the gain (£45,000) relates to the period from 1998 to 2001. The property was let during this period and had previously been Frank's main residence so that the letting exemption is available. Although the gain relating to this period amounts to £45,000 the exemption for letting is limited to a maximum of £40,000.

Overall £205,000 of Frank's gain is exempt leaving only £5,000 chargeable to tax and this is subject to taper relief and the annual exemption so that it is unlikely he will have to pay any CGT.

The letting exemption can be very valuable but is only available on a property that has been your main residence. It is not available on a 'buy to let' property in which you never live.

Periods of absence

Certain other periods of absence from your main residence may also qualify for CGT relief if say you have to leave your property to go and work elsewhere in the UK or abroad. The availability of the exemption depends on your circumstances and length of period of absence. Please talk to us if this is relevant for you. We would be delighted to set out the rules as they apply to your particular situation.

Trusts

The exemption is also available where a property is owned by trustees and occupied by one of the beneficiaries as their main residence.

Until last December it was possible to transfer a property you owned but which was not eligible for CGT main residence relief into a trust for say the benefit of your adult children. Any gain could be deferred using the gift relief provisions. One of your children could then live in the property as their main residence and on sale the exemption would have covered the entire gain.

The Inland Revenue has decided that this technique was being used as a mechanism to avoid CGT and so has blocked the possibility of combining gift relief with the main residence exemption in these circumstances.

Conclusion

The main residence exemption continues to be one of the most valuable CGT reliefs. However the operation of the relief is not always straightforward nor its availability a foregone conclusion. Advance planning can help enormously in identifying potential issues and maximising the available relief. We can help with this. Please contact us if you have any questions arising from this bulletin or would like specific advice relevant to your personal circumstances.